Course and Examination Regulations
valid from 1 September 2020

Programme-specific section:

Bachelor’s programme: Art History / Kunstgeschiedenis

These Course and Examination Regulations (henceforth: OER) have been drawn up in accordance with the Higher Education and Research Act [Wet op het hoger onderwijs en wetenschappelijk onderzoek; WHW] (henceforth the Act) and the following Leiden University regulations:

- the Regulation on the Binding Student Advice;
- the Leiden Register of Study Programmes Framework Document;
- the Academic Calendar;
- the Regulations for Student Registration.

Pursuant to Section 7.14 of the Act the Faculty Board regularly evaluates the course and examination regulations and assesses, for the purpose of monitoring and, if necessary, adjusting the study load, the time it takes students to comply with the regulations. In conformity with Section 9.18 of the Act, the department teaching committee is assigned the task of annually assessing how the course and examination regulations are implemented.

These Course and Examination Regulations consist of two sections;

- a faculty section that is the same for all degree programmes,
- a section that contains information specific to a particular degree programme (this document).

This programme-specific section forms a whole together with the general section and only includes the articles that contain details specific to a particular programme.

Chapter 2 Description of the Programme

Article 2.1 Objectives of the programme

The aim of the programme is to promote the students’ academic development in terms of knowledge, understanding and skills in the field of Art History to such an extent that:

- the student meets the entry requirements for admission to the master’s programmes that follow on from the bachelor’s programme;

- the student is able to work in positions for which undergraduate-level academic knowledge and skills in the above field are required or desirable.

Article 2.2 Specialisations

The programme has the following specialisations:

- Kunst en Cultuur (Arts and Culture) (Dutch and English taught)
- Arts, Media and Society (English taught)

Article 2.3 Learning outcomes

Graduates of the programme Art History have attained the following learning outcomes, listed according to the Dublin descriptors: I. Knowledge and understanding, II. Applying knowledge and understanding, III. Making judgements, gathering and interpreting data, IV. Communication skills and V. Learning skills. The Dublin descriptors III, IV and V are the same for the entire programme. The Dublin descriptors I and II are formulated separately for each specialisation.

Graduates of the specialisation Kunst en Cultuur (Arts and Culture) have attained the following specific learning outcomes, listed according to the Dublin descriptors I and II:

I. Knowledge and understanding related to the specialisation Arts and Culture

1a) have understanding of the history of art from the Western and non-Western world from late Antiquity to the present, and of various forms of the visual arts, architecture and applied arts, that enable them to situate artworks within the context in which they were created and comment on the method of production;

2a) have knowledge and understanding of the history of art from the Western and non-Western world from late Antiquity to the present, and of various forms of the visual arts, architecture and applied arts, that enable them to relate these art works to important theoretical and methodological frameworks that have been formulated and to study them according to the latest scholarly opinions;

3a) have understanding of the art production and art concepts of cultural areas within the Western and non-Western world that enables them to relate art forms from those different cultural areas to interdisciplinary scholarly publications and/or theoretical frameworks and to the latest scholarly opinions in World Art Studies;

4a) have knowledge of collections, museums and cultural heritage that enables them to assess artworks at an elementary level in the light of collection formation and institutional presentations in the past and present;

5a) have understanding of formal, technical and material aspects of the visual arts, architecture and applied arts, and of the history of these technical and material aspects, that enable the graduates to comment on the contexts in which these artworks function or have functioned (especially at the court, in the city and in religious places), and the meaning that is or was given to the objects;
II. Applying knowledge and understanding related to the specialisation Arts and Culture

6a) have understanding of the form, function and content, materials and techniques of artworks that enables them to analyse and describe them within relevant contexts and according to the accepted academic standards;

7a) have an analytical approach to various art historical texts, showing that they understand the questions, general structure and structure of the argumentation of these texts, as well as the theoretical and methodological frameworks that are employed by the author;

8a) can give a substantiated critique of scholarly texts in such a way that they can discriminate between and connect different approaches and methods, and moreover that they can critically assess them in relation to various art forms;

9a) can independently accomplish substantive tasks at a third-year level related to art history, in preparation of the professional or educational practice, or another field of work relevant to the discipline – for example in museums, galleries, archives or libraries.

Graduates of the specialisation Arts, Media & Society have attained the following specific learning outcomes, listed according to the Dublin descriptors I and II:

I. Knowledge and understanding related to the specialisation Arts, Media and Society

1b) have understanding of the developments of the contemporary arts, media and society, and the history of the art production in the Western and Non-Western world, so that they can relate this to the context of their origin and production according to the latest scholarly opinions;

2b) have such understanding of major themes relating to the contemporary arts, media and society as well as the history of art production in the Western and Non-Western world, so that this enables them to situate major themes in the historiography of this research specialisation according to the latest scholarly opinions;

3b) have such knowledge and understanding of themes related to the arts, media and society, and their relation with global challenges, that they can approach these themes from the perspective of current discourses and debates;

4b) have such knowledge of collections, museums and cultural heritage that they can consider, on an elementary level, art works as part of the creation of collections and institutional presentations in past and present, and policies pertaining to them;

5b) have such knowledge and understanding of technical and material features of various media and art forms, that they are able to relate them to methods of production in relation to their social context;

II. Applying knowledge and understanding related to the specialisation Arts, Media and Society

6b) have such understanding of the form, function, content, material and technique of artworks and media that they can analyse and describe these within the relevant contexts and according to the accepted academic standards;

7b) can give a substantiated critique of a wide range of scholarly texts, showing that they understand these texts in terms of their structure, reasoning and argumentation, and that they can situate them within the specialisation.

8b) can give a substantiated critique of a scholarly viewpoint, demonstrating that they can discriminate between different approaches and can critically assess them in relation to various forms of the arts, media and society;
9b) are able to independently accomplish substantive tasks in a professional context relevant to the specialisation, related to the field of arts, media and society at a third-year level, for example supporting policy makers and carrying out supporting research for several institutions that are related to media and culture in any way whatsoever;

Graduates of the specialisations Kunst en Cultuur (Arts and Culture) and Arts Media & Society have attained the following learning outcomes, listed according to the Dublin descriptors III, IV and V:

III. Making Judgements

10) can independently and critically collect data in library catalogues, image collections and other relevant documentation resources, such as written and digital sources, repertories and lexicons, so that they can formulate and develop a concrete research question based on these sources;

11) can process sources, literature and digital data files to produce a clear and substantiated written argument;

12) can relate art historical and cultural historical themes and scholarly research on these themes to their social relevance in past and present;

IV. Communication skills

13) can put into context and explain various media and art forms for a broad audience, using an analytical and critical oral or written argument, substantiated with reasons;

14) can give an oral and written report of their own research, both for specialists within their discipline and in a general professional situation;

V. Learning skills

15) can relate factual knowledge in the area of various media and art forms to the methods and development of theories that are standard within the history of art and media and, to the theoretical concepts that are standard within general cultural history;

16) can independently formulate an academic problem definition under the supervision of a lecturer, and formulate a methodology/theoretical framework to answer the research question satisfactorily. They can also develop this into a coherent argument independently and critically, in the form of a written thesis with a maximum length of 7,000 words (excluding scientific justification and literature);

Furthermore, each humanities programme at Leiden University trains students in the general academic skills formulated by the Faculty. These are specified in Appendix A of the general section.

Article 2.9 Language of instruction

2.9.1. Subject to the Code of Conduct regarding Language of Instruction [Gedragscode voertaal], the languages in which the instruction is given and in which the examinations and final examinations are held are Dutch and English. The language of instruction and examination within the specialisation Arts, Media and Society is English. Students are expected to have an adequate command of the languages of instruction and examination used within the programme, in accordance with the requirements stated in Article 5.2.4. As appropriate, the Faculty publishes the Course and Examination Regulations in English for English-taught programmes.
